The ESA conference 2025, at Baltimore, MA, was a unique and enriching experience where I had the opportunity to present my research in an oral talk. This conference is the most important worldwide in the field of Ecology, so being able to participate and give a talk (which is highly competitive) was a significant achievement. It not only allowed me to share my work with leading scientists in the field but also to establish valuable professional connections that will be essential for my future academic and research career.
